Audio Digitization Project: Just over a year ago, the Marion Public Library approached Ball State University about the feasibility of digitizing the oral histories of military veterans that were collected by Bill Munn's students at Marion High School. There were 60 oral histories recorded on cassette tapes. This was an important project to accomplish but the Library staff knew it was best to outsource it (interviews were initially done on cassette players). Ball State was interested in doing it if they could house the digitized histories on their website. And, that brought up another issue – a streaming server would be needed to host a website with these huge audio files. Ball State applied for and received the digitization grant from LSTA in 2011. The final product should be up & running; there will be a link from Marion Public Library's website to the digitized oral histories. The Library will also receive an external hard drive with the oral histories and verbatim transcripts as part of the agreement. This past week, the Library supplied Ball State with a collection of photos relating to veterans from the Library's historic photo collection – these will be put on the website.

Synergy 2012: There have been two Synergy conferences in Marion during the past ten years. One was on Economic Development and one was on Education. Mary Eckerle has been on the planning committee for this and there will be more information at the meeting.
